

A place they call HOME

PROJECT PROPOSAL

Its located in Kinoni Village
in Nyendo Mukuggwe

50ft X 100 ft

Summary

The Walkfree Kids – are a dance/music group founded in 2019 by Kizito Henry in Nyendo slums in Masaka, Uganda. Currently the foundation has thirty-six kids from less privileged backgrounds and families, and we provide a solid hope for the orphaned, vulnerable, deprived and destitute children seeking a second chance to life.

Since 2019, we have had 24 children missing from the group without a trace and today we are having 17 children living independently without a place to call home. These kids face multiple deprivation and from the start all they share is a belief in their talents and skills to get a brighter future.

The Place They Will Call Home will create a safe, nurturing, and supportive environment as we nurture these young talents into responsible, creative and inspiring leaders.

The Project Grand Cost is USD $28,000 for the construction of the home; this cost does not include the land because we already have the land which was bought by Save The Child Foundation USA.

Overview

“No child should sleep alone in bad weather without a place to call home”

Justification

These 17 kids are living independently as street children! We believe these kids can change their lives when given a chance to a home, a chance to learn, a chance to create, and a chance to grow free from fear.

They are orphaned, abandoned, and displaced due to poverty, domestic violence, or neglect. We have brought them together through music, dance and drama and their have unleashed their potentials, attracting many friends through their unique movement and creativity. The program continues to safeguard them from risk of falling into cycles of crime, substance abuse, and chronic homelessness however the challenge is after the training they have to return back to the streets.

| THE GOAL                                                                                      | OBJECTIVES                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
